Getting Your Professional Licence in Ontario:
The Experiences of International and Canadian Applicants

Are you interested in sharing your story about getting licensed? The Office of the Fairness Commissioner wants to hear from you.

The office has commissioned a research firm to gather first-hand information—from the applicant’s point of view—about registration and licensing in Ontario’s regulated professions. This study includes focus groups and an online survey.

You can help: Please complete our confidential survey at www.fairnesscommissioner.ca/survey.

We want you to complete the survey whether you were educated in Ontario, in another province or territory, or in another country.

The study will provide solid research about a topic where existing information is often anecdotal,” says Hon. Jean Augustine, PC, Fairness Commissioner. “I encourage people to get involved in this project, whether they are applying to get their licences or are already licensed.”

The Office of the Fairness Commissioner is an arm’s-length agency of the Ontario government. Its mandate is to ensure that certain regulated professions have registration practices that are transparent, objective, impartial and fair.

The office believes that everyone, whether educated here, in another province or territory or elsewhere around the world, deserves fair treatment when applying to become licensed in one of Ontario’s regulated professions.
